GRADUATING STUDENT SPEAKER

Victoria Salazar
All You Need is Here

“‘No’ doesn’t always mean ‘no,’” according to Victoria Salazar. “Sometimes it means ‘maybe later.’”

SMC’s 2025 graduation speaker is referring to a rejection letter she received in 2017 from her dream school, UC San Diego. Looking back, she sees that rebuff simply as an invitation to try again. “Sometimes setbacks and detours are just the way you get where you need to be,” she says.

After graduating today, Victoria will transfer to — you guessed it — UC San Diego, where she’ll pursue her Bachelor’s degree in Psychology and Sociology. Her career goal is crystal clear: “I want to be a criminal investigative analyst for the LAPD, working with the nonprofit National Center for Missing and Exploited Children.”

Victoria is passionate about children, calling them “the little stars in our society who need the most care and attention to shine.”

At 26, Victoria is a mother herself.

Her own childhood was difficult. Born in San Dimas, she grew up feeling abandoned by her incarcerated dad. Her struggling teenage mom sent the young Victoria to Santa Monica, where she was raised by her paternal grandparents, Francisca and Daniel.

Despite these hurdles, Victoria was a good student and a three-sport athlete at SaMo High. She tutored classmates in math and writing. She volunteered at Emerson Elementary. Graduating with a 3.8 GPA, she was crushed to be denied admission at UC San Diego.

Victoria enrolled in the nursing program at SMC. She completed two years of coursework before the pandemic derailed her education. She spent the next four years working many different jobs: boxing gym coach, Bloomingdale’s sales rep, professional makeup artist, applied behavior analysis tech.

In 2022, Victoria met and married Nathan Rodriguez, a fellow Corsair now studying computer science with a focus on cybersecurity. After giving birth to their daughter, Victoria resolved to finish her education. She returned to SMC, switching from nursing to psychology, and decided to give UC San Diego another try. This time she received the thick envelope.

Victoria’s message to fellow graduates: “All you need is here,” she says, palms pressed to her chest. “If you know who you are and know who you want to be, then truly, no one can tell you otherwise.

Adriana Brady

Taking the Match

Adriana Brady had only been editor-in-chief of The Corsair for two weeks when the wildfires in Malibu and Altadena struck. It was just after Winter Break, and the publication had only a handful of staff in the bullpen.

But Adriana knew getting coverage on the fires mattered. “We did a lot of live updates those first few days,” she recounts. “Not just on the fires, but the relief efforts. But I knew we could do it.”

It was a turning point for Adriana, who graduates this year with an Associate degree in Journalism. The LA native had initially planned to pursue collegiate volleyball when she enrolled at SMC. But after an injury on the court, she stepped away from the sport she loved to focus on her other passion: writing. That led her to The Corsair.

“Being a part of The Corsair has changed my life,” says Adriana. “It’s definitely been one of the highlights of my time at SMC.”

As a first-generation college student, Adriana initially found the transition from high school to college daunting. But at SMC, she quickly discovered the support and resources she needed to thrive, such as the Scholars Program and the Writing Center. This fall, she’ll be transferring to a four-year university to pursue a degree in journalism, bringing her one step closer to her dream career of becoming a professional sports journalist. “Be open to change,” she advises new students. “Some of the most rewarding experiences come from the unexpected.”

Ivy Ng

Finding Her Voice

When Ivy Ng arrived at Santa Monica College from her hometown of Machala, Ecuador, she found not just a fresh start, but also a sense of belonging.

Born to Chinese immigrants, Ivy speaks Spanish and English, as well as the Mandarin and Teochew languages of her family’s native country. Still, she worried her accent might keep her from connecting. Instead, it became her strength and a bridge to others. “At SMC, everyone cares,” she says.

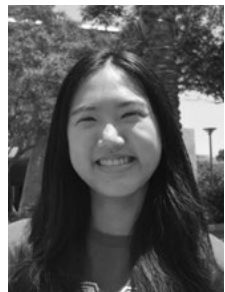

Wanting to be heard, Ivy majored in communication studies. She dove into public speaking, placed second in a campus-wide speech tournament, and became a peer mentor helping other international students find their voices.

Even before classes began, Ivy was building community. She created a WeChat group for Mandarin-speaking students to help them navigate life at SMC. It now supports nearly 150 members — a testament to her instinct for connection.

“She’s always reaching out to students on the fringes, drawing them in and helping them feel welcome,” observes Denise Kinsella, SMC associate dean for international education.

Ivy’s next goal is transferring to a Bachelor’s program in communication. She’s already been accepted to UCLA and UC Berkeley, but hopes to attend her dream school — USC — to study brand management and content creation, and tell stories that reflect the beauty of difference. “I want others to know that being different is not a weakness, but a strength,” she says.

SMC helped her become fearless, Ivy adds. “Coming here gave me the courage to take every opportunity.” She urges people to own their stories — and use them to uplift others.

Dexter Mack

The Art of the Pivot

Pivoting seems like a simple basketball skill. But when done well, it creates space — space to move and change the game.

That's what Dexter Mack did. Graduating today with Associate degrees in Philosophy and General Science, the first-generation college student plans on transferring this fall to a four-year university, where he'll be working toward his dream of earning an MD-PhD in Neuroscience. All because he knew how to pivot.

In high school, Dexter was all in on basketball, a sport he excelled at and loved. But after a tough stretch on the court dimmed that passion, he changed course. When a TED Talk on neuroscience sparked his curiosity, he dove into the subject and realized this was what he wanted. He pivoted to academics his senior year, earning straight As. Then he enrolled at SMC, where he found not only the rigorous coursework he needed but also faculty and staff who cared.

"It makes a difference," says Dexter, "knowing all these people are rooting for you."

That difference shows. In addition to joining SMC's STEM MÁS Program, Scholars Program and Black Collegians, Dexter secured research internships at UCLA and UC San Diego. He also took part in a UCLA IDEA Hack-a-thon, worked as a math tutor, and learned to code. And still, he makes time to train kids at his old basketball academy.

For those looking to change course in their lives, Dexter offers some advice.

"Trust yourself," he says. "Trust your framework of belief, and everything will work out."

Antonio Renoj

Designing a New Direction

After leaving the military in 2010, Antonio Renoj worked hard but felt adrift — cycling through jobs from delivery driver to restaurant manager without a clear path forward. That changed when his wife, Brittanie — a photographer — introduced him to filmmaking. "She taught me how to use a camera and how to put together a vision," he says.

Inspired but without a degree, Antonio struggled to break into creative roles — until he discovered Santa Monica College's groundbreaking Interaction Design (IxD) program. "Design had always been in the back of my mind — I just didn't know what to call it," he says. The program showed him how to combine design, technology, and user experience to solve real-world problems.

Through SMC, Antonio joined Snapchat's Snap Design Academy, became a Stanford University Innovation Fellow, and worked for several years in a full-time marketing role at the L.A. Area Chamber of Commerce — all while finishing two degrees. Collaborative projects, including one with BMW DesignWorks, helped sharpen his skills in leadership, teamwork, and innovation.

Now graduating with a Bachelor's degree in Interaction Design and an Associate degree in Graphic Design, Antonio wants to open a design firm that empowers small businesses. "It's about helping people communicate, solve problems, and thrive."

He credits his family, SMC counselors, and faculty for helping him believe in himself. "That one choice — to go back to school — led to all of this," Antonio says. "I'll always be grateful to SMC for giving me the chance to become who I am now."
